What is a Diversity Trailblazer?

RIT's Diversity Trailblazers are men and women who have helped make RIT a place where differences in race, gender, gender identity and expression, age, national origin, economic status, sexual orientation, language, physical ability, and health are respected and celebrated.

The Commission for Promoting Pluralism launched the Diversity Trailblazers project in May 2004 in conjunction with the year-long celebration of RIT's 175th Anniversary.

Over the course of the succeeding year, a dozen individuals have been recognized for their efforts in making the university environment more inclusive. Monthly exhibits in the Student Alumni Union have highlighted their accomplishments.

An additional 18 people were selected this year as RIT's Diversity Trailblazers of Today. These campus leaders are forging a new awareness of the many facets of a truly diverse community. The 18 were nominated by the campus community and selected by the commission. They are being honored at a ceremony during the 2005 Expressions of Diversity Conference.

Acknowledgements

We are grateful for the efforts and contributions of several members of the RIT community that supported this project. There are five to whom we owe special mention: Gary Gasper, whose idea became a successful reality, championed the project, and coordinated the details throughout the past academic year; Kathy Lindsley, who wrote the text for each display and this program; Rebecca Simmons, who combed through the RIT Archives for background information and photos; Dale Boris-Kane, who oversaw the display design; and fourth-year student Christina Fisher, who set up each display.

RIT thanks you and the Commission for Promoting Pluralism thanks you. Your commitment to this project was over and beyond the call of duty. The memory of this effort will be forever etched into the legacy of RIT.
