San Francisco Taiko Dojo is the first Taiko dojo or school in North America, founded by Grand Master Seiichi Tanaka in 1968. His dream is to have the word Taiko, like karate and sushi, become part of the American vocabulary.

Their performance is powerful and energetic with combination of rhythm, harmony, and body movements. The members are disciplined by Mr. Tanaka who has studied several of the renowned traditional Taiko schools as well as Japanese traditional dance and martial arts.

It is said that more than 200 Taiko teams exist in the U.S., many of whom studied under Mr. Tanaka. His long dedicated work in introducing and promoting Taiko in the U.S. was recognized by the National Endowment for the Arts, and Tanaka received the National Heritage Fellowship in 2001 as the first Japanese ever to receive this award. Mr. Tanaka, the master traditional artist in the U.S., is also one of the chief Certified Instructors of the Nippon Taiko Foundation in Japan.

San Francisco Taiko Dojo has given performances throughout the United States including the performance at Carnegie Hall in 1994. They have also performed overseas in Germany, France, Israel, Mexico, Cuba, and Japan. Their music has also reached a wider audience through such movies as Apocalypse Now, Rising Sun, Return of the Jedi and The Right Stuff.

KOSHU ROA TAIKO

Kosho Roa Taiko is a Taiko team formed in 1981 in Yamanashi Prefecture with the main players having hearing impairment. Yamanashi is located at the foot of Mt. Fuji.

Members of Kosho Roa Taiko have different degrees of hearing impairment. Therefore, it is not easy for the team to play Taiko in synchronization with other members. After much devoted active training twice a week, the team has improved their Taiko skills, and increased their repertoires to become one of the best handicapped Taiko teams.

In addition to Taiko performances, the team is often requested to give lectures titled “Can-Do.” The lectures are based on their own experiences that effort, perseverance, continuation, and teamwork can lead to successful achievement.

In 1987, Kosho Roa Taiko realized their first overseas tour in Finland and former U.S.S.R.

Today in Japan, there are more than 50 Taiko teams made up of players with hearing impairments. They all enjoy experiencing music through Taiko.
