

Oliver Pouliot hails from Rochester, New York where he graduated from the Rochester Institute of Technology with a degree in American Sign Language interpreting. His experience ranges from research with the University of Rochester to a post at the United Nations in 2002. For the past five years he has been based in London, England working in various capacities as an interpreter as well as a fine arts producer/manager. He is now the director of Overseas Interpreting, a sign language company specializing in working with deaf travelers, academics, and businesspeople. He has traveled extensively both on assignment and on his own accord. Oliver's first published work will be released in an edited book by Gallaudet University Press entitled Deaf Professionals and Designated Interpreters.
