Ice-Breaking activity

Although we were not familiar with each other, we could feel that they were friendly, kind and easy-going. Thus we could solve troubles in an easy way when we come to them. They were communicative, responsive, flexible and active to the constructive suggestions, all of which would benefit us a lot. We hoped to be friends. At the same time, we were very grateful for Hurwitz because they taught us how to be a man and how to deal with matters.

“Effective Communication and Negotiation Skills” hosted by DeCaro.
When dividing into groups, students’ discussions were focus on the principles of how to deal with individual conflicts. Students took actions according to their own will to solve troubles. Students could have known better of their own way of dealing with problems, and students have created very sound atmosphere. It pleased the hosts very much.
